Nuclear Protestors In Limerick

An international group says it wants to educate people about harm caused by nuclear weapons, energy, and uranium mining. Footprints for Peace protested outside Limerick Generating Plant in Montgomery County. It's headed for the United Nations. The group says nuclear energy is destroying indigenous populations of Australia and the southwestern area of the U.S. "People need to understand this industry, it's not a solution to climate change. It's another form of cultural genocide throughout the world." The group also brought letters from the mayor of Hiroshima and the director of Mayors for Peace. Exelon officials say : "We think there is a big difference between clean, safe, and reliable energy (which is what we produce) versus nuclear weapons. We think our plant is a good example of producing reliable energy for the region."
